

GPC update

1/11/2015

Greetings all GPC helpers,

It is with great joy I share with you this long awaited news from Liberia. It is back to school!! Our students will start their school year Monday February 2nd. Thanks be to God!

The number of new cases of Ebola has reduced to the point the government of Liberia feels it is safe to be back in school. Let us all keep our students in prayer for safety and to do well in school.

As I have said before, our brothers and sisters in Liberia are so amazed that we still stand with them ready to help their children go to school.

This has been a tough year for God's Precious Children for a couple reasons. I am not sure if it was the Ebola scare or rising tuition costs that has affected sponsorships but we have about 40+ students still in need of a sponsor. If you know of someone interested in sponsoring a student let me know.

Then there was my hip operation that had me down for a couple months. Eight months post operation, my hip really feels good. I had noticed some changes over a period of time and after seeing a specialist was diagnosed with Parkinson's disease. I don't crave pity but prayers that the medicine I am on will do its job.

I am old enough now to see in hind sight right before something really awesome happens Satan will throw stumbling blocks to try to throw you off. Maybe you can recall one in your life.

I have this feeling God's Precious Children is on the verge of something awesome. Thank you for your part in GPC making all this happen. To God be all the glory.

Your friend in Christ
